

The Early Symphony:
18th-Century Views on Composition and Analysis

by
MARIE LOUISE GÖLLNER

Georg Olms Verlag
Hildesheim | Zürich | New York

2004

CONTENTS

Vorwort der Herausgeber	VII
Foreword of the editors	IX
Foreword of the author	XI
Abbreviations	XIII
Introduction	1
Chapter I
Emergence of the Symphony as a Separate Genre	9
Instrumental versus Vocal Music	9
Categories of Introductory Music	13
Views on 'Style' and Origin	15
'Chamber' Music: Sonata, Concerto and Symphony	17
Chapter II
Melodic Unit/Caesura/Cadence	25
The Problem of Terminology	25
The Early 18th Century	26
The Attempt to Find a More Consistent Terminology:
Treatises from the 1760s	32
The 1770s: A Time of Controversy and Revision	35
The 1780s: Simplification	39
Chapter III
Melody and Theme	43
Melody as Invention	43
Theme as Central Idea	44
Main Theme versus Secondary Ideas	46
Attempts to Form a Hierarchy	50
First Theme as Main Theme	52
Contrast: Piano/Singing/Lyric Ideas	57

Chapter IV
Rhythm and Measure	61
Tempo, Meter and the Measure	61
Rhythm as Measure Groupings	68
Symmetry and Variety	73
Rhythmic Figures and ‘Takterstickung’	76
Chapter V
Harmony and Form	85
Harmonic Structure and Modulation	85
Descriptions of Form	87
First Movements of Symphonies	94
Chapter VI
The Process of Composition	97
Melody as the Primary Element: Mattheson and Rhetoric	97
Theme and Function	102
Successive Addition of Voices	103
Dispositio, Elaboratio, Decoratio	105
‘Anlage’ (and ‘Entwurf’), ‘Ausführung’, ‘Ausarbeitung’	108
Harmony and ‘Plan’	114
Chapter VII
Attempts at Analysis: Allegro Movements	117
Riepel (1755)	117
Daube (1797)	127
Vogler: Peter von Winter (1778)	132
Momigny: Haydn’s Symphony No. 103 (1803–1806)	139
Original Sources	149
Bibliography	153
Index	163